A. Listening:

Track 1.32 – tapescript:

There are many (1) amazing stories of human survival, but actually our bodies are very fragile and do not cope well with extremes. Polar explorers can cope with temperatures of -40°C, but only if they keep warm. Most people will collapse if their body temperature drops by only 5°C, and if it drops by 15°C, they'll die. Heat can be just as dangerous. (2) Temperatures of 35°C are safe provided humidity is not above 50%. High altitudes are dangerous too. We pass out when the (3) pressure falls below 57% of normal atmospheric pressure. This happens at about 4,500 metres. (4) Climbers can go higher because their bodies gradually get used it, but no one survives for long at 8,000 metres. At high (5) altitudes, lack of oxygen is another problem. At ground level, about 1/5 of the air is oxygen. If that falls below 1/10, we die.

Track 1.27 – tapescript:

- A So, we're going to do an (1) adventure activity on our day out. What do you think we should do?
- B Well, I'm quite keen on kayaking.
- A Really? I'd rather go (2) surfing than kayaking.
- B The problem with surfing is that the sea is too cold at this time of year.
- A Yes, I (3) suppose you're right. What about parkour?
- B Sorry, but I don't really fancy parkour.

A Why not?

B Well, don't you think it would be dangerous? I've never done it before. I'm sure I'd injure myself.

A OK. How about karting? I like the idea of that.

B Yes, I think (4) karting would be fun. But it's quite expensive, isn't it? Hiking is another option.

A Hiking would certainly be cheaper, but less fun in my opinion. OK, I think we need to make a decision.

There's a good karting circuit near the (5) shopping centre. I don't think it's very expensive. So, overall I think karting would be better.

B OK. That's settled then. Let's go karting
